QUAIL SHOOTING.

Some of the Difficulties That Confront the Man With the Gun.

"One of the difficulties of quail shooting lies in the very fact that would apparently make his killing a simple proposition, his rising near the gun," says Charles Askin in Outing. "Let me illustrate: If a quail rose within ten feet of the gun and confined itself around the shooter's head at a mile a minute the chances are that he couldn't be killed in ten shots, both the bird and the gun changing angle with a rapidity beyond the ability of the mind to calculate."

In the same way a close springing bird may change his angle with regard to the gun so rapidly as to entail a long and accurate swing before he can be roared.

The nature of the quail's flight frequently makes this long swing unavoidable. The bird may rise to the north, pass to the west and be killed to the south. Had it been possible to foresee that the bird would swing about to the south before being killed the gun might have been pointed there, rendering unnecessary a complex gun movement, but meantime the quarry would probably have gone in some other direction. The quail work that calls for care and skill is cover shooting, and the only safe rule there is to point your gun as near the bird as you can when he breaks and shoot as quickly as you can get on."

CONGRESSMAN WHO IS PROBING LOSS OF MONEY IN DAY PORTRAIT CASE

Washington, June 30.—Congressman Courtney W. Hamlin of Missouri has won national fame through his probing into the matter of the payment of Artist Albert Rosenthal for his painting of the portrait of former Secretary of State Day. Although Disbursing Officer Morrison drew $2,450 from the treasury to pay for the Day portrait Jan. 16, 1904, and turned the entire sum over to Chief Clerk Michael two days later, Artist Rosenthal did not receive the $750 due him until March 22, 1904. The art company which charged $60 for the frame did not get its money until June of the same year. What became of the $1,690, the balance of the total sum, no one has yet been able to determine. Mr. Hamlin is chairman of the house committee on expenditures in the state department, which committee is investigating the transaction.

Kill More Than Wild Beasts.
The number of people killed yearly by wild beasts don't approach the vast number killed by disease germs. So life is safe from their attacks. They're in air, water, dust, even food. But grand protection is afforded by Electric Filters, which destroy and expel these deadly germs from the system. That's why chills, fever and ague, all malarial and many blood diseases yield promptly to this wonderful blood purifier. Try them, and enjoy the glorious health and new strength they'll give you. Money back if not satisfied. Only 50c at Teaneck Bros.
